Great Gale Holds Harbor In Its Grasp.

ALL shipping in this harbor was tied up yesterday on account of the great storm which is still raging. Not a vessel dared go out of the harbor and none came in.
Instead of abating, the storm seemed to increase in violence yesterday, and the waves which broke over the entrance of the channel, where the water is at least thirty feet deep, showed clearly that the storm was one of unusual fury for this locality.
It was thought on Tuesday that the steamers bound for the other islands would at least be able to get away yesterday morning, but when the morning came and it was seen that there was no chance of the gale letting up, all hope of sailing was abandoned for another day. Many passengers who expected the Kinau and the Claudine and other boats would sail in the morning were on the wharves, only to be disappointed and wait around on the bare possibility of the storm abating.
Very little work was done on the waterfront. Captains, mates, engineers and sailors gathered around in little groups and discussed the prospects of the weather and sun signs about former great storms which had visited Honolulu, all agreeing that never before had a gale of such fury held out for so long a time in their recollection.
It was rougher in the harbor yesterday than on the day preceding. The waves broke over the edges of the wharves and small boats were banged up against the wharves in a manner which threatened their destruction.
At noon yesterday the wind was blowing strong south southwest and squalls from the southwest were frequent and fierce. Last night the wind was blowing from the south and was blowing stronger than it had all day. There were frequent squalls of rain; in fact, it rained about every ten minutes nearly all day and all night.
Last night Professor Lyons was of the opinion that the storm would lessen somewhat today, but that frequent squalls were likely.
Several adventurous persons went out to the end of the long sewer outfall pier yesterday morning. They found that the pier had been destroyed for about ninety feet and that if the storm continues many more piles will be washed away.
An attempt was made to work the wrecked dredger inside the line of breakers. Some time will be required, after the storm has abated, to rescue the donkey engine of the dredger, which now lies in fifteen feet of water. Those who were out at the end of the pier say that the sea was one of the grandest sights which they have witnessed in these parts for a long time. The waves, in some instances ten feet high, broke with great force over the ruined end of the pier and were fast washing away the piles.
The little piece of land upon which the lighthouse stands has had anything but a pleasant experience during the storm. Bill Williams, the keeper, stands a good chance of losing his home unless the gale soon ceases. The house has already been blown away from the middle of the island, and big waves are now breaking over the little spot which Williams calls his home.
There are several deep-water sailing vessels in the harbor which are all ready to go to sea, but which are waiting for the weather to clear. The island steamers detained in port are the Kinau, Claudine, Lehua, W. G. Hall, Iwalani, Nocuau and Mauna Loa, besides the gasoline schooner Surprise.
One of the sailing vessels waiting to sail is the bark Kaulani, Captain Dabell, of San Francisco.
Jacob Bearwald, superintendent of the job department of the Hawaiian Gazette Company, thought he was having more than his share of trouble at an early hour yesterday morning, when the storm was at its worst.
About 6 o'clock Bearwald was awakened by his wife, who told him that the house was being blown to pieces, and upon investigation it appeared as if she were right. Branches were sailing through the air in every direction and a few of the heavier ones lighting on the roof had torn great holes therein, through which the water streamed in torrents.
When a final puff of wind broke in the window of G. A. Syde, who was rooming in the house, it was too much for that gentleman's nerve, and, without waiting to don his outer garments, he beat a hasty retreat. Mrs. Bearwald grabbed the baby under one arm and endeavored to find a place of refuge, and it was not until the storm had subsided that peace was restored in the household.
